Lost In Translation

2 MANY HOMES 4 1 KID

This is your HOME.

You can be canceled in your own HOME.
Watch your words—before they’re cut out of context.

Kids don’t love anymore.
Porn is cool, prostitutes earn more than heroes.

War still divides humans, and through a six-inch screen
you watch their fragments.
Your heart turned ice cold—the hottest thing right now is materialism.
Everything looks like money.

You lace fentanyl.
You glorify overdose, ’cause it’s better than being corny.

Tell the truth—sirens will surround you, drag you to the reef, and drown you.
Silence is no longer virtue—it’s Gestapo.
We are all gingerbread men, limbs cut to fit the mold.

Wake up, the first thing you reach for—the smartphone.
Social media.
Depression, suicidal thoughts, body dysmorphia.
Read only the headline.
Shorts, reels, TikToks—edited fragments.
Talk with bots in the comments.

And just like that, you become a Nazi.
Just like that, you commit your own Holocaust.
Just like that, you sanctify the Kim dynasty.
Just like that, you blame Islam, you become the Rohingya, you spread hate.

Fake news—once hidden in yellow corners of the press
—now shapes mainstream politics.
BLM. MeToo. LGBTQ+. The essence gets corrupted, revolution becomes a 60-second hashtag campaign.

If they’re on your side, everything’s OK.
Division, rage spread wide. Power grows safer.

Like military spending climbing year after year, like the hottest eight years in recorded history— though floods drown cities, seas rise— you call it leftist media bias. Environmentalism is someone’s business deal.

Birth rates fall, private education soars. Robots and AI feel natural.
The most educated generation is the poorest.
The social ladder broken.

You think you order food yourself. You think you make the algorithm yourself.

‘Freedom, Innovation, Future’ is just another propaganda slogan.
Left and right. Black and white. Red and blue. Man and woman. Rich and poor. Gen Z and boomers. Metropolitan and provincial. Progressive and conservative. You and the immigrant. Christian and Buddhist. Atheist and believer.
Watch your words. Even the order matters.

A billion CCTV cameras—half in China.
A toddler struck by a car, eighteen passersby look away.
Goodwill became a liability.
Data collected in real time. Wiretaps legalized for “anti-terror.”
At your bedside, cameras and recorders. Your chat logs archived forever.

If someone’s ahead of you—it’s all on record. You can drag them down.
Justice. Oh, Justice.

Methylphenidate for mothers in elite districts.
Fentanyl passed like cigarettes to kids, doctors prescribing.
As if prefrontal cortices were fully grown at sixteen, one wrong word and it marks you for life.

Never forgive. You’re flawless. Cast stones at the adulterer. Play God.
Epstein. Weinstein. Scandals, pardons.
Politics and corporations tangled in corruption, privilege, monopoly.

Chaebol heirs praised for their “good character.” The rich walk free. You rot forever. The constitution declares it righteous. Never doubt it.

A friend of a friend dies after a vaccine— billionaires triple fortunes in a pandemic— you call it ignorant conspiracy.
Freedom of speech the constitution guarantees is silenced by social punishment.

Algorithms pretend to expand participation but only drive you to extremes.
You seek answers in YouTube sermons, internet forums.

Church became commerce. Faith became transaction.
Believers feed megachurch pastors who embezzle.
Pray to heaven for money.

When John Lennon's "Imagine" plays— imagine he beat his wife, and turn it off. This is your HOME. Hear James Brown sampled in a song— remember his domestic violence and his drugs, and turn it off. This is your HOME.

Expose every sin, leave none hidden. That’s your righteous HOME. Never forget. Condemn forever. No change, even in death. Abandon it all.
